This report summarizes the programs under which large numbers of U.S. undergraduates spend a part of their undergraduate careers abroad. The report consists largely of a series of tables showing the number of students abroad, types of programs, academic levels, qualifications, location, costs, supervision, and numerous other conditions. Programs are identified by name of sponsoring institution or organization.

INTRODUCTION

This report summarizes programs under which large numbers of U.S. students spent part of their formal undergraduate careers in foreign countries during the academic year 1959-60. It also provides information on plans of U.S. colleges and universities to establish additional programs in the next year or two. The data were compiled by the Institute of International Education for the National Conference on Undergraduate Study Abroad in Chicago in October 1960, jointly sponsored by the Association of American Colleges, the Council on Student Travel, the Experiment in International Living and the Institute of International Education.

The significant growth of this new dimension of international education is clearly seen if the present survey is compared with a similar report, "Foreign Study for U.S. Undergraduates," published by IIE in August 1958. In 1956-57, twenty-two programs provided foreign study for 542 U.S. undergraduates. In 1959-60, sixty-four groups sent 2,405 students to other countries.

"Programs for U.S. Undergraduates in Other Countries" is based on 370 replies to questionnaires mailed to the presidents of 971 colleges and universities eligible for membership in the Association of American Colleges. In IIE's 1958 survey, more than 50 per cent of the colleges and universities responded. The present survey, which had to be completed in less than ten weeks at a time when many college officers were away from their desks, represents a response of approximately 30 per cent.

To the users of this report, several words of caution are in order. Variations in concepts and practices of U.S. colleges and universities have always baffled those who have tried to describe simply our system of higher education. This difficulty is compounded when one attempts to compile and present information in neat columns of statistics. Local autonomy, flexibility, and the resulting heterogeneity are doubtless sources of strength and vitality in U.S. higher education, but they complicate the presentation of easily comprehensible information.

A quick review of the responses points up the lack of agreed-upon definitions of terms in higher education. Not all respondents completely understood the questionnaire, which appears as Appendix I. The definition of eligibility for inclusion in the report was "programs organized or approved by U.S. educational institutions, as well as arrangements for individual students, which enable U.S. undergraduates to study abroad and receive credit in the U.S. institution." Some colleges replied that they conducted an undergraduate program for study abroad when their catalogues state only that faculty committees screen requests for such study and may or may not grant credit. Although the compilation which is here reported is based upon literal reproduction of the responses, rather than on free interpretation, it is fair to assume that many U.S. colleges and universities did not clearly understand what information was being sought.

An additional factor should be noted. A number of colleges indicated that they did not sponsor programs abroad for undergraduates, even though some of them have had such programs for several years. It is understandable that in the complex administration of large institutions, the president or dean may not be aware of a program carried on by a single department. The brief time available for the completion of the survey made it impossible to follow up all of the programs about which IIE had some information.

Because of semantic problems and because this survey is descriptive rather than prescriptive, the only criterion for the inclusion of figures in the totals which follow has been the granting of academic credit at home institutions for undergraduate study abroad. It should be remembered that the figures are far smaller than would have been the case if the traditional pattern of individual sponsorship had not limited many replies. Except in the summaries of answers to page one of the questionnaire, summer school programs have not been included because of insufficient and therefore misleading response in this area.

I have said elsewhere that the only safe generalization that can be made about present undergraduate programs abroad is that it is not safe to generalize. In spite of this statement and the limitations of the survey, some significant conclusions can be drawn.

1. Undergraduate study abroad has not only tripled in the past three years, but is likely to continue to increase.

This astounding growth is demonstrated in the following comparisons of data reported to IIE in 1956-57 and in 1959-60.

	1956-57		1959-60

Academic year programs conducted by organizations other than U.S. colleges & universities*	-	-	10	884
Totals	22	542	64	2,405

The recent interest in foreign study is also demonstrated in Table VII. In the decade 1920-30, three programs were established. In the next decade there were four; in the following decade, six. Since 1950, fifty-seven new programs have been established, seventeen of these in 1959-60. Twenty additional programs are listed for 1960-61.

2. New and varying ways of integrating undergraduate education abroad into the total scheme of campus life are developing.

The traditional pattern under which Junior Year students with a language major went abroad for a full academic year under the auspices of a U.S. college or university in affiliation with a foreign university no longer dominates the field. Freshmen, sophomores, juniors and seniors are now being sent abroad. Foreign stays as brief as three months are reported. Programs are no longer restricted to language study, but include a wide range of disciplines. In a number of programs students have no relationship to or affiliation with a university in the host country. Ten programs, listed in Table IV, are not conducted by U.S. colleges and universities.

* These programs were not included in the earlier survey.

- 80
3. Although most U.S. undergraduates ~~go~~ to Western European countries, the movement to other areas is increasing.

Table VI shows that U.S. students were in 31 countries last year. France, with 26 groups, had the highest concentration; and there were between ten and twenty groups in Germany, Spain, and Italy. Programs in areas where U.S. students have not traditionally gone, such as Ghana, Hong Kong, Lebanon, and the Philippines, are chiefly those of the Commission on Ecumenical Mission and Relations of the Presbyterian Church. Antioch reported students in Algeria, India, and Morocco. It is interesting to note that six countries of Central and South America are represented in this year's tabulation. Four of these programs -- those in Brazil, Chile, Costa Rica, and Peru -- have been financially aided by the Department of State. This is the first time that U.S. government funds have been spent on U.S. undergraduate programs. Most groups now send their students to the large foreign cities in preference to the provincial centers.

Conclusion

Even though the present survey is incomplete, it clearly demonstrates the need for evaluation by U.S. administrators and scholars of this growing trend in U.S. undergraduate education. "Academic Programs Abroad: An Exploration of Their Assets and Liabilities," which reported the special conference at Mount Holyoke in January 1960, outlined many of the critical questions which must be faced in assessing present and planning future experiences abroad for U.S. students. We hope that in the Chicago conference general agreement can be reached on criteria and standards.

Carefully planned learning experiences in other countries can contribute greatly to the education of young college students. Sophomore or junior year programs abroad must, however, be honest education. Colleges must set realistic and attainable goals and spend the time and money to arrange courses and experiences which will assure progress toward stated objectives. This matter demands the serious attention of all who are concerned with the standards of higher education in the United States and with the attitude of foreign educators toward the U.S. undergraduate college.

Institutions conducting academic year programs for their own students only

Those admitting students from other institutions to their academic year programs

Those conducting summer programs only, for their own students and others

Institutions conducting no programs

/a Conducted was interpreted liberally. (See accompanying text.)

/b Planning was widely interpreted as planning to continue with present program.

/c Institutions was frequently interpreted as including organizations other than colleges and universities.

/d For academic credit, appearing in introductory letter, was frequently not applied.

Thus summary figures should be understood as far from definitive.

/a See chart of distribution by countries. Antioch maintains three centers abroad: in Besançon, in Tübingen, and in Quanajusto. There are two resident directors, one in Europe and one in Mexico. Students work and study on highly individualized programs. In 1959-60 they were enrolled at the following: Universities of Edinburgh, Exeter, Leeds; Aix-Marseille, Besançon, Paris; Berlin, Tübingen; Vienna; Padova; Barcelona, Madrid; Guanajuato, National of Mexico; and Delhi. Also University College of North Wales; Hochschule für Sozialwissenschaften (Wilhelmschaven), Goethe Institut and the University of Munich; Nederlandsche Opvoeding Instituut voor het Buitenland (Nijenrode); Albert Schweitzer College; International People's College (Elsinore), Scandinavia Seminar; Tata Institute of Social Sciences (Bombay). Students were also working in Algeria, Japan, Morocco, and Norway.

/b An exchange program, unique among those reported in that no academic credit is transferred back to Bethel College. Included in survey as representing a long-standing orientation toward international education. See also chart of projected programs.

Twenty-eight reported by comment on the questionnaire, by letter, or by interview:

Alverno College, Wisconsin---"interested in possibility of study abroad for our students...would welcome data on existing programs"

Bethel College, Kansas---planning with other Mennonite colleges for India and Latin America---interview

Chapman College, California---"faculty has discussed matter but no action has been taken"

DePaul University, Indiana---"The Junior Semester Program, which was held the second semester of 1958-59 for 15 students [Zell-am-See, Austria], had one of our full professors as conductor, and students were registered for a specific program and received DePaul credit and grades. This program will be repeated the second semester of 1960-61, still on an experimental basis."

Fisch College, New York City---"We are just initiating the Finch European Study Plan. We prefer to wait for another year before completing reports."

Goshen College, Indiana---planning with other Mennonite colleges for India and Latin America---interview

Hartwick College, New York---beginning 1960, will permit students to join other programs

LaVerne College, California---planning with other Church of Brethren colleges (Bridgewater, Elizabethtown, Juniata, Manchester, McPherson) for 1961---interview

Longwood College, Virginia---"very much interested in exploring possibilities for our students"

Los Angeles State College, California---"exploring possibility of cooperative effort with all fourteen California state colleges"

Manchester College, Indiana---"have set up committee to plan for cooperative undergraduate study abroad program with five other colleges" [see LaVerne College above]

Mills College of Education, New York City---"slight possibility"

Mazareth College, Kentucky---"very much interested but have no definite plans at present"

Oklahoma Baptist University, Oklahoma---checked planning question "yes"

Pace College, New York City---"in preliminary planning stage, but not ready to fill out questionnaire"

Parsons College, Iowa---planning to take junior class abroad for ten weeks, beginning February, 1961---interview

Quincy College, Illinois---"have been considering"

San Diego State College, California---"We are working on a winter program of studies in France which we hope to offer in two years."

Stanford University, California---centers in France and Italy similar to that now in Germany are to be ready for 1960-61.

Tufts University, Massachusetts---program in Classical Studies "under discussion only"

University of Dubuque, Iowa---will have one student in India in 1960-61
